The original Macintosh version shipped with a version of AutoCAD that shipped only with an Amiga ADF database format. The original Macintosh version was never much used and was phased out as the Macintosh market and the company's market share shifted to the PC. Although released in 1989, the Macintosh version did not ship until 1990. The first releases were on CD-ROM, and they were first released in the United States on May 5, 1990, coinciding with the introduction of the Macintosh IIx. AutoCAD 2 The Macintosh version of AutoCAD 2 was released on May 5, 1990. It introduced true 3D model editing capabilities, new 3D capabilities and support for Microsoft's DirectDraw and OpenGL graphics APIs. The development version of AutoCAD 2 for the Macintosh was used to develop the final version of the Macintosh version of AutoCAD 2.
